Wasps mistaken
For butterflies in my belly.
Call it beautiful,
But I feel the tragedy.
A rush of desperation
In the desolation of waiting
For you to view us
As something in season.
Never forget
They call it lovesick for a reason.

I'm making peace with the fact
You hurt me so you wouldn't hurt her.
I am who she would be
If there hadn't been me.
Not all martyrs burn.

You weren't right about me.
A letter to my brother.

Some memories hold us closer than we hold them.

Yes, life moves on. People grow up and leave their hometowns, create new photo collages, but I think deep down, we're all fifteen, bright-eyed and desperate, lost and searching. Kissing boys in closets. Pretending we're older and wiser than we are.

I don't think we ever fully move on from what happens to us in high school . . .
And who we loved first.

SPOONER:

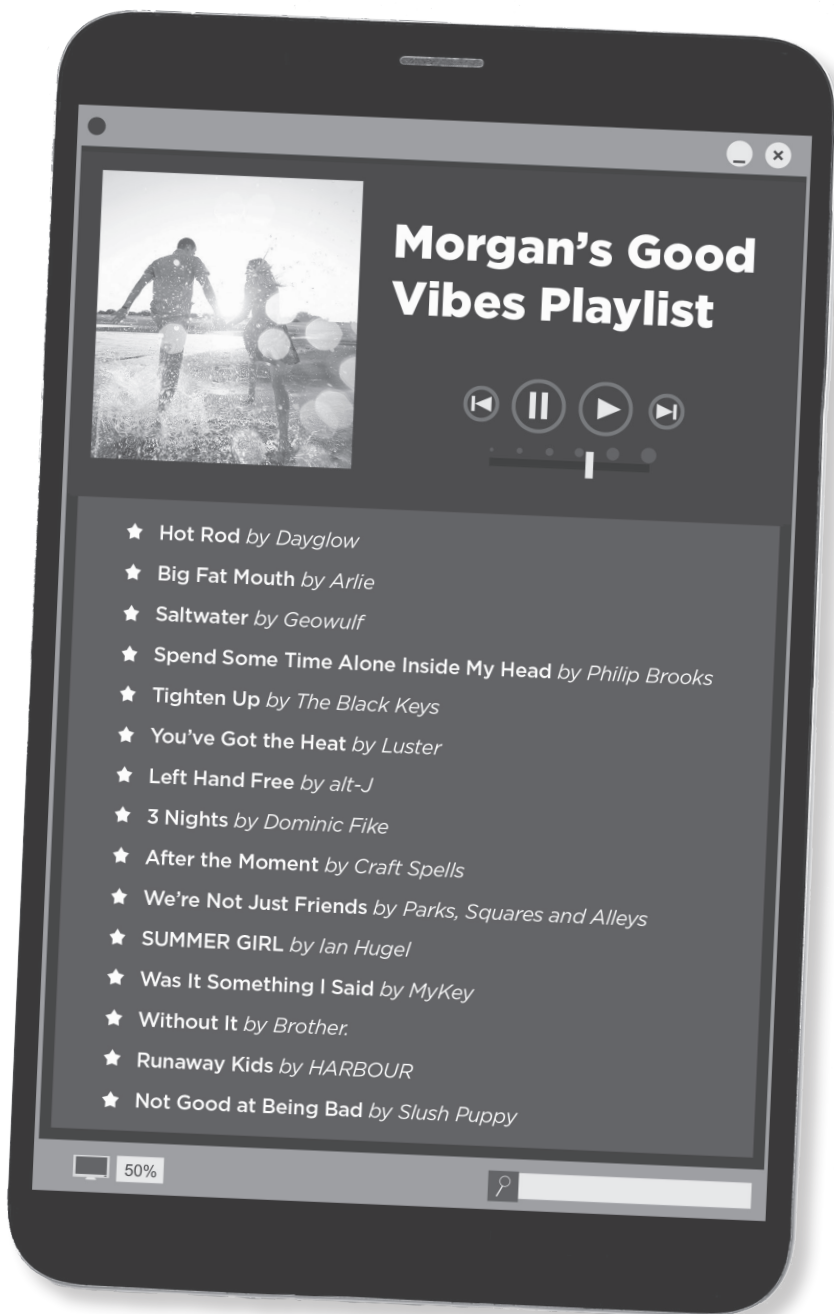

Hi Sweetie Cakes, I'm your host Spooner Hudson, and the stories I want to share with you take place on a road. 30A. A strip of highway on Florida's Emerald Coast where people have money, and no one worries about who lurks in their backyard. But even paradise has a dark side. Killers. Predators. Criminals. The very worst of humanity camouflaged by beachfront condos and quartz sand.

Real estate tycoons who embezzled millions.

A schoolteacher found dead in the marsh.

High schoolers faced with the underbelly of their hometowns.

In this ten-part series, I'll tell you what newspapers won't. Follow along as I expose the secrets of this highway. We're only getting started.
